What is reablement?
Reablement provides adults with the opportunity, motivation and confidence to:

- Relearn or regain some of the skills they may have lost due to poor health, disability, impairment or accident
- Gain new skills that will help them to develop and maintain their independence

The service provides intensive reablement for people who are eligible for home care services before a long term home care service is provided. Reablement can take place for a maximum of six weeks, but is often completed in a shorter time period depending on assessed needs. If still eligible, any long term home care service will be provided after the period of reablement.

As well as the satisfaction people gain from being able to do more things for themselves, reablement is likely to lead to less need for traditional home care in the long term.

How does reablement help you and how does it work?
Reablement provides help with personal social care, activities of daily living and other practical tasks for a limited time. The approach used will enable you to develop and regain both confidence and practical skills to carry out these activities independently.

Trained staff work with you to ensure that you are supported in your own home and to enable you to safely practice those skills.

An action plan is agreed with you. Your plan is based upon assessments carried out by social workers and other appropriate professionals such as occupational therapists.

The service will work with you to set achievable goals. These goals will be based on what is reasonable for you to expect to be able to do for yourself at the end of the reablement programme. They will be recorded as part of your goal plan and kept in your home so that you, your carers and care staff can monitor your achievements and identify new goals to work towards.

To enable you to choose a course of actions that will help you achieve your preferred lifestyle, reablement workers will follow the programme in your goal plan. They will help you to understand and accept that there may be risks to living in the community, but we will work towards minimising these and try to ensure that all risks are acceptable. The emphasis for the service will always be to encourage you to do things for yourself.

What type of tasks can reablement help me with?
Reablement can help with a range of tasks including:

- Personal care tasks such as washing, dressing and toileting.
- Domestic skills such as food and drink preparation, shopping, organising and planning daily routines, using transport and laundry.
- Encouraging the necessary confidence to manoeuvre. This would include getting up and out of a chair,
